

GeoCities co-founders John Reizer and David Bohnett

Businessmen Bohnett wanted to help people create websites. He teamed up with Reizer, a tech-savvy computing manager at McDonald-Douglas, and GeoCities was born.

Jason Scott

Half a dozen unofficial efforts, notably the Internet Archive as well as Jason Scott and Archive Team, managed to mirror substantial portions of GeoCities before its 2009 termination by owner Yahoo.

The Digital City, Amsterdam, version 3.6

Amsterdam's nonprofit city-wide virtual community started in 1994. It helped inspire both other virtual cities, and sites like GeoCities.

With the growing up of most members of the first generation, a second generation with family values, if not a second generation with a goal of becoming a family business, is being formed. The first generation is now in its 50s and 60s.

19 weeks for $1.2

The second debate had been described as "fair" by moderators, a registered Republican, was hardly unfair. However, the debate's fairness was questioned by the denial of his poor performance against Hillary Clinton at the first presidential debate on September 26th.

Amid this frenzy of name-casting, Mr. Trump, ever the underdog's candidate, also declared himself the debate's winner. Readers of his casually winning Twitter account and watchers of the sympathetic hosts on Fox News were told that Mr. Trump had been awarded the win by several unscientific online surveys. Polls conducted after the debate, with statistically sounder approaches, disputed this. In one conducted by FiveThirtyEight, 48% of voters declared Mrs. Clinton the winner, while 42% favoured Mr. Trump.

The Economist 12 weeks for $12

About Us | Help | Terms of Service | Contact Us | ADMIN

Hillary Clinton overstates impact of New START on Russia's nuclear arsenal | Political act | September 27, 2016

Four Seasons Archive Presents

HOW TO BUILD AN ARCHIVE

20 years in the making

JOIN US FOR OUR
20th ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2018
6:00 - 8:00 PM

Madison Square Garden | New York, NY

The Internet Archive Presents

HOW TO BUILD AN ARCHIVE

20 years in the making

JOIN US FOR OUR
20th ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION!
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2016
5:00 - 9:30 PM

Tickets via Eventbrite | More info at archive.org

TV NEWS ARCHIVE
archive.org/tv

- Want to watch the prez debates online?
 - Want to find a video clip of Trump saying "bad hombres"?
 - Want to re-watch Ann Coulter soundbites?
- The TV News Archive has more than 1.8 million shows archived from 1968 to 2016. Search them all, edit, embed and share the clips for free.

STAFF

STAFF

Explore

STAFF

Web Archive

built by Robots and 1,000 librarians

BENJAMIN MANDEL
VOLUNTEER

KENJI NAGAHASHI
SOFTWARE ENGINEER

JOHN LEKASHMAN
CONTRACTOR

ALEXIS ROSSI
DIRECTOR OF
MEDIA & ACCESS

TRACEY JAQUITH
TELEVISION ARCHIVE
ARCHITECT

STAFF

TACOS
TACOS

Would You Like This Truck At Your Party?

ASADA _____ BEEF
AL PASTOR _____ MARINATED PORK
POLLO _____ CHICKEN
POLLO ASADO _____ GRILLED CHICKEN
CARNITAS _____ FRIED PORK
LENGUA _____ TONGUE
CABEZA _____ HEAD AND CHEEKS
TRIPIITAS _____ TRIPES
BUCHE _____ NECK
VEGETARIANO _____ VEGETARIAN

NO
CONSENTIMIENTO

STAFF

HOW TO BUILD AN ARCADE

Call 415.559.0404

www.tonayense.com
@comcast.net

H. TOMATE

Menu

Tacos
ASADA	BEF
AL PASTO	WTFD FORK
POLLO	CHICKEN
POLLO AS	CHICKEN
CARNEVAS	FRIED FORK
MEXICANA	TONGUE
GAMBIA	HEAD AND CHEEK
TRIPITAS	TRIPS
BUQUE	TECH
VEGETARIANO	VEGETARIAN

H. TOMATE
THE MEXICAN LINE
SAN FRANCISCO, CA 94102
415. 558. 0444

This cheerleader page welcomed visitors to GeoCities in its heyday. But, what remains of the massive site is mostly raw files and screenshots. What's the best way to preserve and present this kind of digital world? By the way, GeoCities' homepage—and website—will face such problems again and again.

Cats have been online for a long time. Pittsburgh was the GeoCities neighborhood for everything to do with our animal companions.

Although small places in time in the '90s, the presidential campaign for 2000 the web had become a new mass medium, complete with its Capitol Hill was the place for all things political.

Two pages of various kinds were a staple of GeoCities. Naps was the neighborhood for fan sites, including anime.

The Neighborhoods

In 1999 GeoCities was the third most-visited site on the web.

Tens of millions of "homesteaders" created personal pages in theme-based neighborhoods of their choice. Those neighborhoods started out as webcams in real places in Los Angeles—one in the gay mecca of West Hollywood, another in Beverly Hills for high-end shopping. But when GeoCities invited users to add their own pages on those themes, a virtual land rush began.

By 1999 there were 41 theme-based neighborhoods, ranging from fan fiction to fine dining. You could also choose from WallStreet for investing and finance, WestHollywood for LGBT, EnchantedForest for kids, Heartland for hometown values, and so on. Tools and templates made it easy to get started—no HTML skills required.

Deleted City is an interactive visualization created by Richard Vigen, of the 650-gigabyte backup of the early web hosting service GeoCities. Vigen's "excavation" of the files that remained depicts the file system of the GeoCities backup as a city map, spatially arranging the different neighborhoods and individual lots based on the number of files they contain. Much of the user-interface to the original GeoCities was lost.

Richard Vigen investigates new strategies to find the big stories in big data through research and design. He designs and produces interactive data visualizations and data art, but resides in the Netherlands. His work has been widely recognized by many professional organizations and publications, including Wired, Generation, The Smithsonian, Afterschool, The European Design Awards, and The Dutch Design Awards.

Learn more at richardvigen.nl

The entire map Neighborhoods User pages Individual page

What was Geocities?

Started in 1994 as Beverly Hills Internet by David Bohnett and John Reznar, GeoCities grew into the biggest online community of its era. Besides personal pages there was business hosting, world news, shopping, and more. After a spectacular IPO GeoCities was bought by Yahoo! in 1999 for over $3 billion.

But then a new kind of online community took off. The focus of sites like MySpace and Facebook wasn't general topics, like Beagle owners or punk rock. Their focus was you, the user—and your connections to your friends.

Yahoo! eventually decided GeoCities was obsolete. All 38 million pages of the main English-language site were to be erased in October 2009.

Then several groups of hacker preservationists stepped in. The Internet Archive, Archive Team, and other volunteers preserved tens of millions of pages. You can find most at the Internet Archive, <https://archive.org/web/geocities.php>.

GeoCities Japan however, is still thriving today.

GeoCities co-founders John Reznar and David Bohnett

Jason Scott

The Digital City Amsterdam, version 3.0

Tokyo Fuji #402/book.htm

De interpre

In the very, very post and edit
But as it dev

That left a ne ordinary peo
wanted to sh

Some commu servers and pictures of d

Like Comput
the web, Geo and LGBT is can imagine.

The site grew visited place by users. Tha

On the eve
Ten years lat their proper ed by unc

ed City different y. It is agent

Staff Only

STAFF
HOW TO BUILD
AN ARCHIVE

JASON SCOTT
FREE RANGE ARCHIVIST

JASON SCOTT
FREE RANGE ARCHIVIST

Web Archive

370 million websites
273 billion webpages

ALEXIS ROSSI
DIRECTOR OF
MEDIA & ACCESS

TRACEY JAQUITH
TELEVISION ARCHIVE
ARCHITECT

